A NOTE FROM AYESHA

Remake Founder and CEO, Ayesha Barenblat

In 2015, I founded Remake with a simple belief: the women who make our clothes deserve dignity, safety, and fair wages. I knew the industry needed more than small improvements. It needed a movement. That is how Remake began.

Ten years later, what fills me with pride is not just what we've accomplished, but who we built it with. Our global community — Changemakers, students, allies, and garment workers themselves — has grown into a powerful force for transparency and systemic change. Together, we've used stories, campaigns, and collective action to shift public understanding and hold brands accountable.

Through our Made In film series, #PayUp and #NoNewClothes campaigns, and advocacy for policies like the California Garment Worker Protection Act, our community has driven real change, putting workers' voices at the center of every action. Each effort reminds us that when we act together, our impact multiplies.

What inspires me most is seeing how this movement has grown beyond what we imagined. What once felt niche is now a global conversation, fueled by the courage and creativity of people like you.

As we celebrate ten years, thank you for being part of this community. Together, we are creating a fashion industry that is fairer, safer, and more just for everyone. The work continues, and our impact will only grow.

In gratitude,

Ayesha Barenblat
Founder, Remake

OUR MISSION

Remake unites Changemakers in the fight for fair pay and climate justice in the clothing industry.

Since 2015, we have grown into a global advocacy organization, building a coalition of garment workers, students, labor leaders, journalists, lawmakers, designers, brands, and everyday consumers. Together we push for systemic change that makes the clothes we wear safer, fairer, and more sustainable.

In the past 10 years, Remake has exceeded our biggest hopes and expectations, evolving from a storytelling platform into a global movement. Together we have saved lives, dismantled exploitative loopholes, and put millions of dollars back into the hands of garment workers. This is the work we do every single day, and you, our community, propel us forward.

Through coalition building and collaboration, our goal is simple: every garment job should be safe, dignified, and resilient to climate impacts.

Wear Your Values Fashion Show, NYC

THE PROBLEM

Despite the fashion industry being valued at $2.5 trillion dollars, garment workers and their communities face endemic wage theft, precarious working conditions, and gender-based violence.

Addressing fashion's impact is one of the foremost climate and social justice issues of our time. The current clothing industry operates on a model that fails to deliver safe jobs of dignity for fashion's most essential workers. Of the 70 million highly-skilled garment workforce, 80% are women of color who not only face low pay and wage theft but who are also disproportionately impacted by floods and heat from climate change, which fashion is increasingly contributing to through massive overproduction.

Additionally, the fashion industry is the third-most polluting industry in the world, on track to contribute to 25% of the world's carbon budget by 2050. Fast fashion has devastated our environment while also exploiting frontline communities, leaving those most vulnerable to bear the brunt of pollution and climate disasters.

garments are produced annually with many discarded within years, mostly dumped in the global south.

2-8%

of greenhouse gas emissions come from fashion — the third worst industry behind food and construction.

of fashion brands don't pay garment workers enough to live on, while most endure unsafe working conditions.

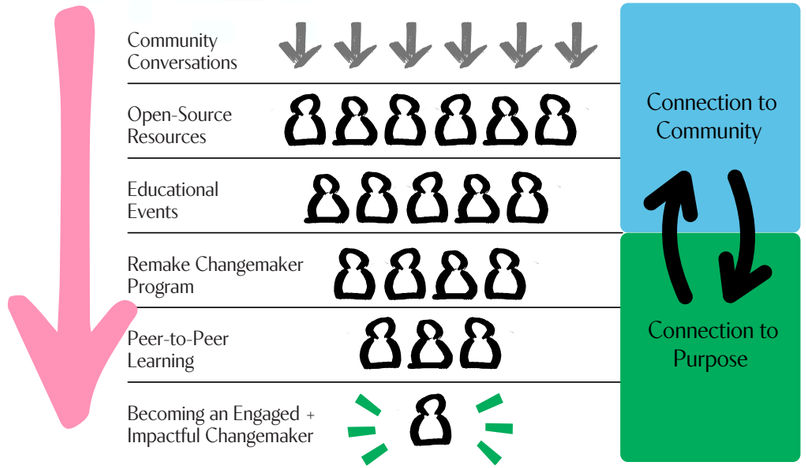

WHY IT MATTERS

We are pioneering in a new and essential form of education, one that is free, accessible, and urgently needed. Young people today rarely have the resources to understand the realities of the fashion industry or how to push for meaningful change. As the challenges in fashion grow, the need to equip and give voice to the next generation becomes more critical.

Remake fills that gap by giving emerging Changemakers the tools, knowledge, and community they need to turn awareness into action.

Our programs connect them with peers and mentors across fields, helping them see the links between fashion, labor, and climate justice. By combining real-world experience with a global support network, we nurture their growth, creativity, and resilience so their impact is not only immediate, but lasting.

The future of fashion depends on how we learn and build together. Collaboration turns individual inspiration into collective action. Education ensures that action is informed, equitable, and enduring. By investing in the next generation of Changemakers, Remake is not just changing fashion, we are shaping a culture where justice, sustainability, and human dignity are at the center of every decision.

COMMUNITY

GRASSROOTS ADVOCACY

Changemaker Age Demographic

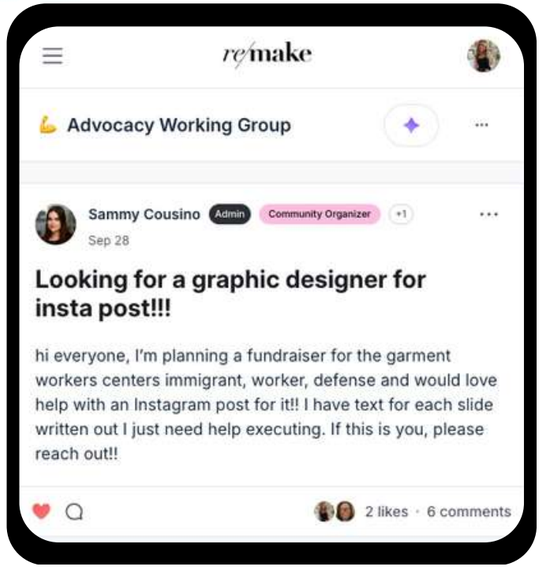

Through initiatives like our Changemaker Program and community-driven campaigns, we invite everyone to join us in shaping a better fashion future.

At Remake, our culture is all about connection, care, and co-creation. We show up for each other and for the people who make our clothes; whether that's hosting a circular fashion event in New York City, leading a campaign in Pakistan, or joining a virtual Community Call to learn about garment workers' rights.

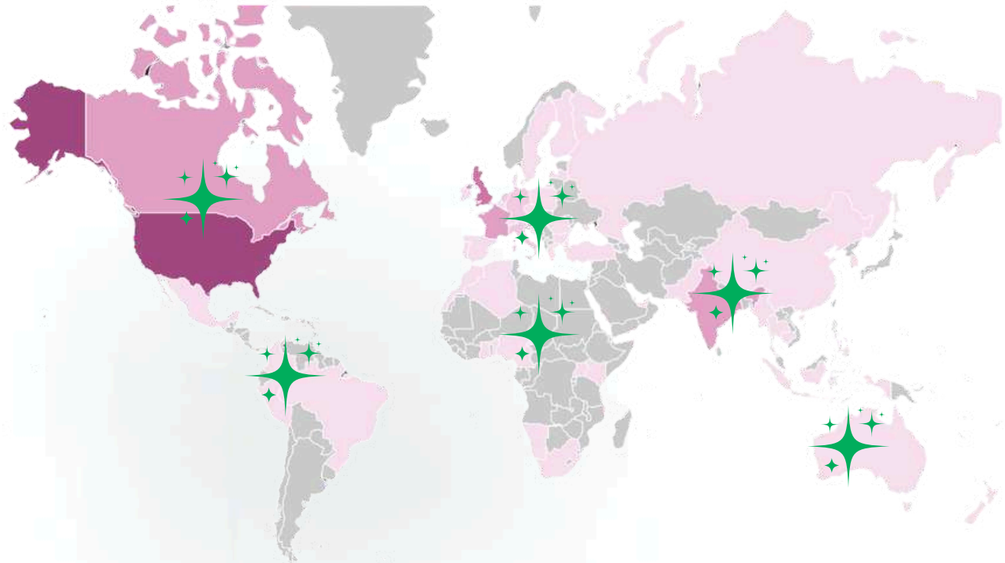

Since 2019, we've been bringing together Changemakers from around the world to take consistent, meaningful action in their communities, online, and beyond.

Our consistent educational programs and community gatherings meet people wherever they are in their fashion advocacy journey. In small groups, Changemakers connect, learn, and grow together, amplifying their impact and helping us move closer to a fashion industry that is sustainable for everyone.

WHY COMMUNITY?

Over the past decade, our grassroots hubs and online community have grown into a powerful ecosystem of Changemakers, each distinct yet united by the belief that fashion can and must do better for people and the planet.

Clothing Swap, Florida, US

On the ground, organizers and volunteers bring our mission to life through clothing swaps, film screenings, panel discussions, and advocacy events that spark real change in their communities. From college campuses to city networks, they have built spaces where people learn, connect, and take collective action for a more equitable fashion industry. These gatherings are where conversations turn into movements and lasting relationships form among people committed to making a difference together.

Together, our grassroots and digital communities fuel one another. The grassroots network builds depth and connection, nurturing Changemakers through education and collaboration. Our online community brings scale and visibility, amplifying local stories to inspire millions around the world and turning awareness into action. Every post, share, and comment helps connect people across borders, transforming individual inspiration into collective power.

DSNY event in New York

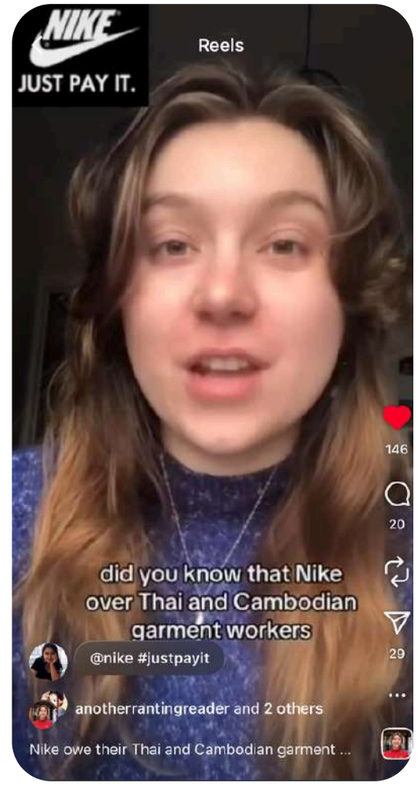

At its core, our community proves that transformation does not happen in isolation. It happens when we show up for one another, share our stories, and take action side by side. This is what makes Remake not only a movement, but a home for changemakers everywhere.

Active Community Members

Since launching our Ambassador Program in 2019, our grassroots community has grown from a small circle of early advocates to a global force of nearly 2,500 active Changemakers in 2025.

Together with our digital community, this rapidly growing network is driving awareness, mobilizing action, and fueling a movement for fair pay and climate justice that is stronger than ever.

SOCIAL MEDIA IMPACT

With more than 397,000 followers and an annual reach of roughly 25 million unique users, @remakeourworld is the beating heart of a global movement. Our platforms bring together a powerful ecosystem of communities such as students eager to learn and take action, garment workers fighting for dignity, advocates mobilizing for policy change, creators using their platforms for good, and everyday consumers committed to transforming the fashion industry.

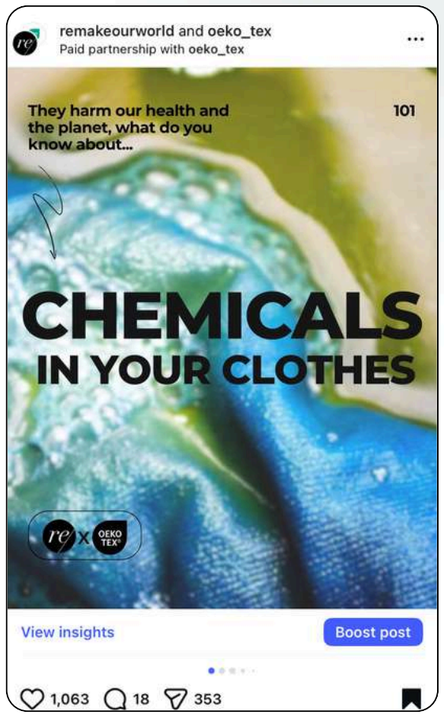

This allied online community is instrumental to everything we do. Its scale allows us to surface stories that might otherwise go unheard, amplify frontline voices, and rapidly mobilize people around key campaigns, from wage justice and trade policy to climate accountability and corporate transparency. When hundreds of thousands of people engage with a post, share an action, or learn something new, the ripple effects are felt across classrooms, boardrooms, and legislative halls.

OUR ONLINE ACTIONS REGULARLY MOBILIZE THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE WITHIN 24 HOURS

A large, engaged social community is not a vanity metric but a strategic force. It allows us to shift culture at scale, challenge dominant narratives, and build pressure for systemic change. It ensures that the movement for fair pay, safe workplaces, and climate justice does not happen in silos but in solidarity.

SPOTLIGHT STORIES

Being a part of the Remake community has truly brought my work and passion to the next level. Remake has provided me with so many opportunities to learn about other Changemakers' work and to share my own. From facilitating a Community Call to exhibiting my fashion piece at Remake x Duality's NYFW exhibition to currently working on sharing my research in the Remake Times, Remake has given me a platform to take action.

My favorite memory was first meeting with Holly. Going into the meeting, I was nervous that I, as a high school student, would not be taken seriously for my work. But Holly was genuinely enthusiastic about learning about what I had been doing and connecting me with opportunities. I have never felt so valued in the work that I do, and I left the meeting feeling supported and inspired.

Remake Impact Strategist

My favourite Remake memory thus far has been leading our stall at Brighton's Slow Fashion Week. This was my first in-person event, and it was so incredible to meet everyone in person and share the love. The UK Hub's wonderful CO, Hayley, was also one of the leaders of Slow Fashion Week through Brighton Fashion Collective, and the event was a HUGE success.

We were surrounded by like-minded, incredible Changemakers, all fighting for a fairer fashion industry worldwide. Stalls included local charities, vintage sellers, upcyclers, creatives, and we were even treated to a collection of sustainable fashion shows. We engaged with numerous new Changemakers, introducing them to Remake's mission and empowering them to join our vibrant community.

I also love working with my amazing team in the States, Holly, Alison and Sammy, as we continue to develop the Changemaker programme into a space that encompasses all of the reasons why slow fashion and sustainability matters.

Remake has become a huge part of my life since I became an Ambassador a few years ago. My work within the climate justice space at university and on my digital platform, The Conscious Press (formerly The Little Wardrobe), led me to become acquainted with my now dear friend, Jemima Elliott. She spearheaded the Remake University Hub, of which I was a founding member. Together, we connected UK institutions and highlighted the importance of joining grassroots organisations in the fight for fashion and climate justice.

I co-created video content with Ambassadors across the world, joined Community Calls and actions, and met some of the most inspiring people in my life. I then became the Community Organiser Assistant for Remake, won the UPP Student Sustainability Fund with my group campaign Stitch by Stitch, and was Highly Commended at the Green Gown Awards 2025. I am now fortunate enough to work part-time for Remake as an Impact Strategist, and this work means more to me than I can express. To support a team that inspires me every day is such a privilege, and I'm so excited to continue advocating for Remake's mission around the world.

COLLABORATION

COLLABORATION & EDUCATION

Collaboration is the foundation of fashion's transformation and a core value at Remake. Over the past decade, we have shown that when people come together across industries, geographies, and lived experiences, real momentum toward systemic change becomes possible. The future of our movement depends on our ability to collaborate boldly, connecting students, brands, activists, workers, and everyday consumers in the shared effort to reimagine what fashion can become.

Our partnerships with advocacy groups, academic institutions, and grassroots leaders prove that when we combine our strengths, we amplify our impact. Together, we have mobilized thousands for policy change and co-hosted programs that turn awareness into meaningful action. Many of these programs are hosted and organized by our very own changemakers, giving them the opportunity to educate and expand their reach.

In 2024, Remake hosted 49 virtual education programs featuring 78 speakers with expertise in supply chains, labor rights, policy, activism, and research. More than 2,218 people joined live, and recordings continue to reach new audiences every day.

Two examples of Remake's Virtual Programming:
Rethinking Fashion's Doomed Climate Strategy with Transformers Foundation & Intro to Fashion Supply Chains

Collaboration in education ensures that no one is left behind. It builds bridges between classrooms and factory floors, consumers and garment workers, and local action and global policy. It transforms understanding into agency and enables people everywhere to be part of the solution.

COLLABORATION & EDUCATION

Our global Remake community is turning collaboration and education into a movement with worldwide reach. This year, Changemakers organized grassroots events that created welcoming spaces for learning, connection, and collective action. Their leadership shows that when everyday people come together, we can shape a fashion industry that is fair, sustainable, and accountable for all.

Remake Changemaker

Remake has definitely plugged me in to the global movement of fashion lovers that are committed to sustainable fashion. I appreciate Remake because it's a grassroots movement - the only requirement to join is a commitment to sustainable fashion, and each member has the ability to make an impact in their own way. Remake has given me the courage to begin host events around second-hand fashion, and the language to educate my community about sustainable fashion policy.

United Nations Fashion and Lifestyle Network SDG Media Zone

Without a doubt, my favorite memory is attending "Wear Your Values Weekend" hosted by Remake and the UN General Assembly program "Fashion's Role in the Global Circular Economy" during New York Climate Week in 2025. I had never been in an environment that was so full of inspiration and a strong sense of community. I was honored to represent Remake as a Changemaker and fashionista. These events were my first opportunity to join the global discussion about how grassroots movements can influence policy change and consumer behavior. I left with resources to expand my knowledge of circular fashion and a renewed sense of dedication to stopping fashion pollution.

KARA FABELLA

Remake Community Organizer

Remake has really kickstarted my passion for activating community events in the fashion and overall sustainability space. With their support and PBS-affiliated org, KQED, I was able to co-creatively direct the first of its kind sustainable fashion show with a 500+ audience turnout--bringing together local upcycling designers, vintage vendors, and leading Bay Area voices, all promoting fair fashion in different ways.

From an advocacy lens, there have been some incredible opportunities, from attending the Global Fashion Summit in Copenhagen last year to KQED and corporate speaking engagements, to moderating panels shedding light on circularity as well as significant policy changes in California like SB-707.

CHANGE

CHANGE - CAMPAIGN WINS

We've seen it over and over: when people take action together, change happens. With shareable assets, cheat sheets, and easy-to-use toolkits, our free campaign materials make complex issues simple to understand and powerful enough to catch the attention of mainstream media. Taking action has never been easier or more impactful.

Made In Film Series Launch (2015-2017)

Our Made In short films introduce the public to the people making our clothes, offering a glimpse of what factory life is like and how clothes are made in countries like Haiti, Pakistan, Mexico, Sri Lanka, Cambodia and the United States.

Ambassador Program Debuts (2019)

Through monthly community calls, skill-building workshops, local meet-ups and one-on-one training, we equip them with the necessary assets and resources to be fierce advocates in the fashion industry.

Fashion Accountability Report Launches (2019)

Scoring the world's most profitable brands on climate and human rights impact. Aside from serving as an advocacy tool and mobilizing consumers to demand better from the brands they love, the report also functions as an educational tool, helping brands understand how they can improve their business practices. To date, the 2021 report has received over 50,000 views and been referenced in a multitude of media stories.

#PAYUP (2020)

Recognized as the most successful labor rights campaign in fashion in modern history, our viral #PayUp campaign unlocked $22 billion owed in canceled orders to suppliers from 25 of the biggest fashion brands during the Covid-19 pandemic, including Target, Calvin Klein, Amazon, Asos, Nike, and Gap. Our #PayUp petition reached over 270,000 signees, putting the pressure on brands to pay garment workers, and ultimately, save lives as the pandemic turned the industry upside-down.

INTERNATIONAL ACCORD (2021-22)

After the Rana Plaza factory collapse in 2013 that killed over 1,100 garment workers in Bangladesh, a binding agreement called the Bangladesh Accord on Fire and Building Safety was born to ensure safe workplaces, equipment and training for millions of Bangladeshi garment workers. After expiring in 2021, the law was renewed and expanded to new garment-producing countries thanks to months of public campaigning from our community and partnering coalition. Today, the renewed agreement is called the International Accord for Health and Safety and aims to move these life-saving protections into Pakistan. It has been signed by major companies including American Eagle, Bestseller, Hanes, NEXT and PVH.

GARMENT WORKER PROTECTION ACT (2021)

We led the communications strategy and built a coalition of fashion brands to help pass the Garment Worker Protection Act in California, getting 45,000 mostly Latinx workers paid $14/hr. Prior to the passing of this groundbreaking bill, which was also the first law in the world to hold brands jointly liable for garment worker wage theft, workers were earning as little as $3/hr due to loopholes in a broken system.

WORST WAGE THEFT (2022)

After garment factory owners in Karnataka, India, refused to pay close to $59 million in unpaid wages to garment workers, we again rallied our community to demand that major brands producing in the region pay their workers. Included in this list of companies that allowed the theft to occur in the first place were Walmart, Adidas, Columbia and Puma. As of February 2022, 14 Karnataka garment suppliers agreed to pay over $28 million in wages for nearly 200,000 workers.

VICTORIA'S DIRTY SECRET (2022)

After a 13-month battle to secure $8.3 million owed in compensation to more than 1,250 Thai workers who sewed bras for Victoria's Secret, we rallied our community to send letters to the brand's CEO and flood its social media. After drawing attention to the cause and having a behind-the-scenes conversation with the company's CEO, Victoria's Secret stepped up and took out a loan to pay their workers.

#NONEWCLOTHES

In 2020, as the world paused and the pandemic reshaped daily life, Remake launched #NoNewClothes, an initiative designed to help people rethink their relationship with fashion. It wasn't just about skipping new purchases; it was a call to explore creativity, sustainability, and connection. Participants were encouraged to upcycle, swap, rent, mend, and reimagine their wardrobes, turning a global moment of reflection into a movement for conscious style.

From its beginnings, #NoNewClothes was built around community. People joined together to share tips, host clothing swaps, organize virtual and in-person workshops, and celebrate the art of rewearing and repurposing garments. What started as a pandemic-era challenge quickly became a fun, social, and inspiring way for individuals to engage with fashion more thoughtfully, all while forming connections with like-minded peers.

Today, #NoNewClothes stands as a signature part of Remake's mission: proving that sustainable fashion can be stylish, social, and joyful. By linking environmental impact with labor rights and creative expression, the campaign empowers participants to take tangible action — preventing waste, reducing their carbon footprint, and supporting ethical practices — while celebrating the power of a community-driven movement. It's more than a challenge; it's a vibrant, ongoing celebration of fashion that matters.

Why #NoNewClothes Matters

Each year, billions of garments are produced in exploitative conditions, often harming workers who face low wages, unsafe environments, and little recognition. At the same time, fast fashion generates massive environmental damage: mountains of textile waste, water pollution, and high carbon emissions. Choosing to pause new clothing purchases is a small but meaningful step that directly reduces demand for these harmful systems.

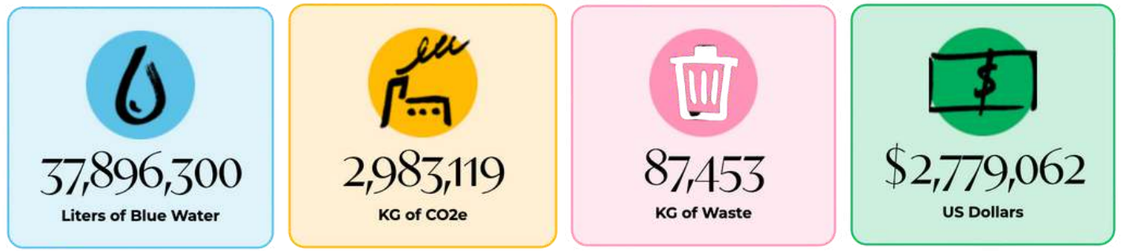

Did You Know?

Taking the #NoNewClothes challenge for just 90 days has a measurable impact on both people and the planet.

On average, participants can conserve 3,900 liters of blue water (the equivalent of the water needed to produce several kilograms of cotton garments) and reduce their carbon footprint by 307 kg CO_2e, helping to offset a portion of fashion's 2–8% contribution to global greenhouse gas emissions. They also limit waste by keeping 9 kg of clothing out of landfills, while also saving around $286 by pausing new purchases. These actions reduce the 70 pounds per person of clothing typically discarded each year.

Every choice adds up, showing that pausing new purchases is not just symbolic, it's a practical, collective step toward a more sustainable, responsible fashion industry.

Current collective impact of 9,717 #NoNewClothes participants (as of December 2025)

Remake Changemaker

Being involved in Remake's community literally changed my life. My first year joining in 2019 I was trying to figure out what to take in university that would contribute to seeing the most change in the industry. After attending multiple community calls, I decided that policy change was the place for me. Since then I've started a Substack, organized a clothing swap, wrote a script for a social media anti-Black Friday campaign, among other social media campaigns.

My absolute favourite memory of Remake was visiting New York during fashion week and meeting so many people in the community during the NYFW event. It was unbelievably inspiring to be in a room full of change makers and like-minded people who are just as passionate about seeing a change in the industry. I will never forget it. I revisit that memory every so often to motivate me to continue pursuing and believing in change.

Where to begin. Remake is the reason I am where I am and who I am today. I started as an ambassador, then a CO for Canada, then a part of the education team. Now I am just simply forever a Remaker. Since joining the Remake community, I have prioritized sustainable ability both in the way I think and live. This community has connected me to so many wonderful, positive, and inspiring people and has taught me what social impact truly means. I have started my own small business with the help of this community, encouraging others to change their behavior when it comes to clothing. I've done this by hosting clothing swaps and yoga events and bridging the connection between yoga philosophy and circular fashion. I've inspired others to do the same in their communities and feel I've grown as both a Changemaker in the Remake community and personally as a human being. I can't thank Remake enough for all that they have inspired in me and can't wait to see what comes next.

My favorite Remake memory is getting the chance to walk in the fashion show portion of the United Nations Global Engagement Summit. I had the opportunity to be one of the models for Julieta Gaitan Rubio and her sustainable fashion clothing. I will never forget this! What a privilege and awesome event to be part of.

I have been a Remake Changemaker for three years now, and I feel that the ideas I have on how to change my community, change the fashion industry, and change the world, are heard and met with so much enthusiasm from a wonderful group of young people. Remake has helped me realize that through dedication and hard work, change is possible. We have done everything from community swaps and sewing lessons to advocacy on Capitol Hill. I have learned I can share my knowledge and passion about upcycling, sustainability, and garment workers' rights with others. Its uplifting to have a community so many people who share my passion for fashion sustainability and are working to create change. Remake is made up of people who have hope for a better future - and then have the resources and drive to make change.

My favorite memory from Remake is when I told the DC Organizer, Carly about the idea for an advocacy day, and she became so excited, and then a couple months later I got to meet people from all different states who were just as excited to advocate on Capitol Hill as I was.

Joining the Remake community in 2019 reaffirmed my belief that fashion can be a force for good. It helped me become more involved in the climate and social justice movement by providing the gaps in knowledge and tools needed to lead local community organizing efforts and support global and national advocacy campaigns aimed at achieving lasting industry change. Seeing the immediate impact inspired me to attend graduate school to further amplify the work and continue being as bold and brave as Ayesha, as well as the thousands of Changemakers around the world.

I have so many memories from over the years that it is difficult to choose. Being able to partner with some of my favorite companies, labels, and organizations in the Seattle community has been such a gift. Over the past ten years, countless partners, individuals, foundations, and corporate partners have stood with Remake. We are truly overwhelmed by the kindness, generosity, and belief in our mission that has made this work possible.

From our donors to our volunteers and partners, thank you for showing up for workers and helping us turn vision into action. Your dedication makes this movement real, and together we are building a fashion industry that is just, sustainable, and centered on the people who make our clothes. We are deeply grateful, and excited for what the future holds.
